To whom it may concern

I am a project manager for an account involving translation of mobile application software. Sabina Aleskerova has been working as Azerbaijani translator in the account for 1.5 years. She has also been responsible for fixing and providing feedback for linguistic bugs raised by a third-party UI testers.

The account has rather strict requirements regarding style guidelines and terminology. Translators are also required to refer to various other sources during translation. The number of bugs raised against Azerbaijani translations is below average, which is an indication that the quality meets client expectations.

In her role as translator, and as part of the bug fixing process, Sabina has worked with different tools and systems. After initial training, she has needed little advice and has managed all tools and processes well.

Overall, Sabina has been professional, reliable and timely. Beyond translation services she has provided linguistic consultation and her valuable input has exceeded client expectations.

I am happy to recommend Sabina to any similar role.

Sincerely,
